Hom. II. 16, 211 – 217

Text Übersetzung:

(A.T. Murray)

And yet closer were their ranks serried when they heard their king. And as when a man build the wall of a high house with close-set stones, to avoid the might of the winds, even so close were arrayed their helms and bossed shields; [215] buckler pressed on buckler, helm upon helm, and man on man. The horse-hair crests on the bright helmet-ridges touched each other, as the men moved their heads, in such close array stood they one by another.
